

Visit to Lele

By Sreyendra P. Dhakal, Grade 9

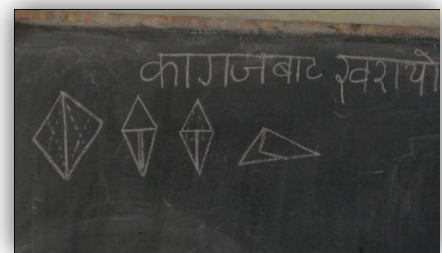

Our experience at Lele was very awe-inspiring. It all started when Mahesh Sir, Mike, and Thirtha sir, our English, Art, and Nepali teachers, announced the day of the trip to Lele. One reason why I was encouraged to go was because our teachers were more excited than we were. They gave brief information on our lesson plan and described how amazing an experience it was going to be. We were going to a school named Saraswati School, and our main goal was to exchange our ideas with the students there. It was all about service learning through which our inventiveness capacity was tested.

Social Service of this type was totally new to us. We were never used to the impression of sharing our ideas and creativity with the students there. We were assigned to different classes, my friends and I got grade 7. Looking at the state of the children it was very off-putting, the students were taught by force and the teaching style was only by memorizing. The teachers there were very firm, strict and only focused on studying.

Looking at the privileges and fun stuffs we are getting to do in our school, and calculating the time of “fun” activities done in that school was very disheartening. Our teachers are more caring, fun loving, and exciting, the best examples are the teachers who took us to this wonderful place. This kind of upkeep was not provided to the children. So, we decided to give all the fun activities we could, and make our visit very amusing for them.

For the children of grade 7, we organized the game Chinese whisper so that all the students could participate. It was very effective. Then we gave them papers and assigned them to draw something that they admired the most, amazingly most of them drew Nepal’s flag. Our unforgettable few minutes in grade 7 were over. Then we entered Grade where the teachers gave us the idea of teaching them how to make an Origami. We taught them how to make cranes, ducks, cars, elephants and many other stuffs, I didnt know how to make cranes and stuffs, so I decided to teach them to make an airplane. It was not only about making a plane and fly it, but it was about making the children feel fun and relaxed. Actually it was not only for the children but we also had a great time, and it was a new type of learning for us. All the kids had a great time. Seeing them happy made us delighted.

All the activities were finished, and then the hard part came, the time for good-bye. We went to all the classes and had some talks with the awesome kids and finally said bye. All in all it was a trip full of enthusiasm. Thinking of the great time we had there and thinking of the bright kids it brings tears to my eyes. This amazing trip was created by our teachers, and I deeply thank them for giving us this wonderful opportunity to share our notions. It was a great experience and I look forward to going there sometime soon in the upcoming future.
